CHILD PROTECTION

Protection from violence, exploitation, abuse and neglect

In 2024 UNICEF expanded its work to keep children safe from violence and neglect by strengthening child protection systems with prevention and response services.

UNICEF significantly expanded the reach of its programme to improve integrated child protection services, which were provided to over 171,000 vulnerable children. UNICEF and its government partners launched the second phase of the integrated child protection model (ICPM) expanding from 12 to 17 counties. Plans are underway to test this model in more and diverse sites with different approaches.

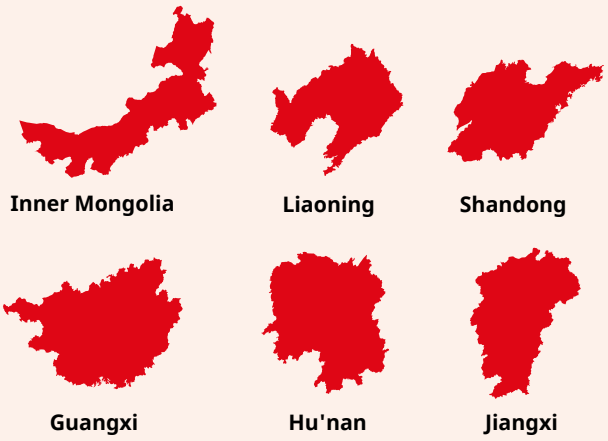

Positive parenting initiatives have benefited more than 33,000 caregivers, having been expanded to 26 counties in 11 provinces.

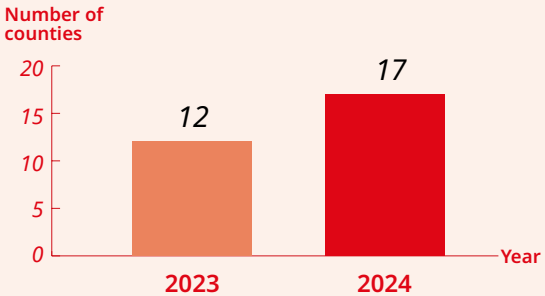

UNICEF continued to strengthen the social services workforce. Over 108,000 professionals registered for a rural social work course, and over 4,600 social workers attended in-person training.

Another milestone in 2024 was the approval of standard operating procedures (SOPs) for child victims at one-stop centres that UNICEF had developed alongside government partners. These SOPs will guide over 2,700 centres.

To protect children online, UNICEF worked with the government and the private sector to include a child rights perspective in the development of technologies such as AI.
